

Copyright Provisions and Guidelines

All printed material on this website is provided under general copyright. This is intended to protect the integrity of its contents, not to unnecessarily restrict its fair use. This website (including its content and design) is exclusively owned by Arthur J. Smith. You are permitted and encouraged to reproduce and distribute any print material including complete newsletters found herein in any format provided that you do not alter the wording in any way including its general context (if applicable, make it clear it is an excerpt), do not charge a fee of any kind for the copied material (including compensation for reproduction costs), and clearly indicate Arthur J. Smith and Comprehensively Reformed Christianity as its source. For printed material in any format, our website URL is requested. For web postings, a direct link to our website is requested.

The three Comprehensively Reformed Christianity books offered on our website are similarly copyrighted, as is indicated on the copyright page at the front of each book. Excerpts from our books (unaltered in wording or as to context) may be freely used in articles, books, or manuscripts that will be published (either by a publisher or self-published) as long as the source of the material is clearly indicated and Arthur J. Smith is credited as its author. Reference should be made to the full title and publication date of the specific book from which such text is taken. We do not restrict the use of short quotes and excerpts taken from our books so long as the copied portion does not make up more than 25% of the total text of the work you plan to publish as your own.